Menophilus the Poet

Life No biographical information exists for a poet named Menophilus. The name appears in historical sources, but refers to other individuals, such as a friend of Emperor Marcus Aurelius and a provincial governor under Hadrian. These figures are not associated with poetry. The suggested Hellenistic or Imperial period for the poet lacks specific corroboration.

Works No works are attributed to Menophilus the Poet in the major scholarly sources and digital collections consulted. The assertion of a single work is unsupported.

Significance Menophilus the Poet holds no established significance in Greek literary history due to the complete absence of surviving works and reliable attestation as a poet in the authoritative record.
