Archinus the Historian is unattested in standard scholarly sources. The name Archinus is known from other contexts, such as an Athenian politician and orator of the late 5th century BCE involved in the democratic restoration after the Thirty Tyrants, and a sculptor from Miletus. No biographical details or historical writings link these individuals to an historian named Archinus said to be active from the 4th to 2nd centuries BCE, an unusually broad date range.

No specific titles, fragments, or subject matter of any historical work by Archinus the Historian are recorded. Major reference works and fragment collections do not list an historian of this name.

Archinus the Historian is not recognized within the canon of Greek historians. The absence of any attributed writings and the vague chronological assignment suggest the figure may represent a conflation, a very minor lost author, or a mistaken attribution.
