

Ἰωάννης Ἀργυρόπουλος

John Argyropoulos on Aphthonius and Rhetoric

eul_aid: ttc

Period: Ὀψιμαρχαία Late Antique
Dialect: Κοινή φιλοσοφική Philosophical Koine
Domain: Γραμματική Grammar
Format: Πραγματεία Treatise

John Argyropoulos was a Byzantine Greek scholar born in Constantinople around 1415. After earning a doctorate from the University of Padua in 1444, he taught in Constantinople before fleeing to Italy following the Ottoman conquest in 1453.

In Italy, he became a prominent teacher of Greek philosophy. He lectured in Florence under Medici patronage, where his students included Angelo Poliziano and the future Pope Leo X, and later taught in Rome, where he died around 1487.

His primary contributions were Latin translations of and commentaries on Aristotelian texts, including the Nicomachean Ethics, Physics, and On the Soul. He also produced various orations and letters.

Argyropoulos was a key intermediary in transmitting Aristotelian philosophy from the Byzantine world to Renaissance Italy. His esteemed translations and his teaching directly shaped the philosophical education of Italian humanists, bridging late Byzantine scholarship and the early modern revival of classical thought.

Works (1)

- Εἰσαγωγή εἰς τὰ προκαταρκτικὰ τοῦ Ἀφθονίου · Introduction to Aphthonius' Preliminary Exercises · 3 passages