Leon of Pella was a Greek writer from the Macedonian city of Pella, active in the 4th century BCE. Beyond his origin, no details of his life are recorded.

His only known work is On the Gods in Egypt, which is now lost and survives only in fragments cited by later authors. Leon's significance rests on this lost treatise, which applied a euhemeristic interpretation to Egyptian religion, arguing the gods were deified human kings.

His work was cited by Josephus in Against Apion and by the Christian writer Tatian. Through these references, Leon represents an early Hellenistic effort to rationalize non-Greek mythologies.
