The Homeric Hymns are a collection of thirty-three ancient Greek poems. They are not the work of a single author but were composed by various unknown poets over several centuries, from the Archaic to the early Classical period, roughly the eighth to the fourth centuries BCE. Although traditionally linked to Homer in antiquity, modern scholars agree they were not written by the author of the Iliad and Odyssey.

The poets were likely professional performers called rhapsodes, who worked within the same oral storytelling tradition as the Homeric epics. The hymns are written in the epic dialect and meter and were composed for performance. They often served as preludes to the recitation of longer epic poetry, aiming to honor a specific god and gain their favor.

The collection varies greatly in length, from very short invocations to lengthy narrative poems. The most substantial hymns are dedicated to Demeter, Apollo, Hermes, and Aphrodite. These longer works tell foundational stories about the gods, such as the abduction of Persephone in the Hymn to Demeter or the mischievous infancy of Hermes.

The collection is a primary source for early Greek religion and mythology. According to modern scholars, the hymns preserve some of the oldest versions of important myths and provide vital insights into ancient cult practices. They bridge the genres of epic and lyric poetry and were influential models for later literary hymns. For contemporary readers, they offer a crucial window into Greek religious thought and the development of epic poetry beyond the most famous Homeric works.
